We are Equitech.

What if every hackathon could be diverse?

Being dedicated to diversity while planning your hackathon can be difficult. At Equitech, we acknowledge that and are dedicated to tackling the lack of diversity in tech by ensuring your planning process is as seamless as possible while keeping your most important metrics in the forefront.

Join us in our misson to make tech as inclusive as possible.

StarterHacks

Introducing beginners to tech, regardless of their academic interests

StarterHacks is Equitech's first project.. It is an annual hackathon held at the University of Waterloo, and was where Equitech tested its concept and technology. StarterHacks focuses on inter-disciplinary collaboration while keeping an emphasis on learning.

In both its runs, StarterHacks has achieved almost 50% female participations, defying hackathon norms.

TOHacks

Fostering an environment to embolden students towards a career in STEAM

We worked with the TOHacks team to help plan and strategize their first hackathon. It is a 12-hour long hackathon that is exclusive to both high school and university students primarily from Toronto/GTA held at the University of Toronto. TOHacks focuses on bringing an inclusive and diverse group of students to put forth their innovative ideas for a day of creative problem-solving.
